German versus German Camera names

The Parvola was originally called Klein Ultrix and Kleinbild Ultrix. The name Parvola was found by means of a prize contest.

In the catalogue of "Dresdensia" Kamera Vertrieb Dresden (about 1933 I suppose) the Serien Reflex was called "Stürmer" and the Ultrix "Laar". The name Stürmer is clearly a Nazi influence (in this catalogue there is also a camera named "Pionier"). I don't know if Laar means anything.

History and maintainance of this list

This list has a long history. Many persons have contributed to its contents. In the latest paper version, which also contained data about Exa(kta) and Lumimax, the following people were listed:

Michael Charlier, Germany
William Dean, USA
A. Demsar, Yugoslavia
Stein Falchenberg, Great Britain
Peter Heimbach, Germany
Albert Heynderickx, Netherlands
Peter Lanczak, Germany
Gerhard Meyer, Germany
Siegfried Mueller, Austria
R. Panneck, Germany
Norlin Rober, USA
Hugo Ruys, Netherlands
David Wodinsky, USA
Werner Wurst, Germany

Currently, I update this list without mentioning all new contributors. I hope this will not stop you to help me correct and improve this list by sending me updates-with-proof.

Later I will in some way add pictures of the various camera types. Before that, I will give you a determination model which will help you to find out exactly what camera type you have, without the need to study every Ihagee pre-war catalogue.

I am still testing the model and finding weak points in it.
